SEALED PRESSURIZED INK CARTRIDGE

Writes underwater, upside down, at any angle, from -30° F (-35° C) to +250° F (121° C), over grease, 3 times longer than the average pen, is environmentally friendly and is unconditionally guaranteed!

When astronauts began to explore the outer reaches of space, Paul Fisher realized that there was no existing pen which could perform in its freezing cold, boiling hot vacuum.

Countless experiments and a common sense approach to findings resulted in the invention of the sealed and pressurized Fisher Space Pen® cartridge and in 1967, after 18 months of rigorous testing by NASA, the Space Pen was selected for use by the astronauts.

Still used on manned space flights, the Fisher Space Pen is unconditionally guaranteed to give outstanding service both here on Earth and in space.

Sliding float separates ink from pressurized gas →

← Ultra-hard Tungsten Carbide Ball

↓ Stainless steel precision socket prevents leaking yet delivers uniform ink flow

← Thixotropic ink in a hermetically sealed, pressurized reservoir writes three times longer than an ordinary ballpoint

The Fisher Space Pen® is the ultimate in dependability. Every Space Pen is guaranteed to perform in temperatures from -30° to +250° F, underwater, in zero gravity, at any angle— even upside down! Its reliability means it's the only pen you'll ever need.

The Fisher Space Pen is the choice of ski patrols, search and rescue teams, law enforcement agencies, armed forces, and everyone who demands reliability in a writing instrument.

Each Fisher Space Pen is precision assembled, hand tested, and carries an unconditional lifetime guarantee.

Paul C. Fisher

HOW A FISHER SPACE PEN HELPED SAVE THE APOLLO 11 MISSION

It's a story that for many years was not circulated outside the inner circles of the U.S. Space Program: the Fisher Space Pen helped the original Moon-landing astronauts, Neil Armstrong and Edwin (Buzz) Aldrin get back to Earth.

When about to leave the moon, and the Astronauts were climbing back into the Lunar Module, the life support backpack on one of the astronauts brushed against the plastic arming switch and broke it. The switch was to have activated the LM's engines for the module's rendezvous with the mother spacecraft.

Aldrin informed Houston's Space Center by radio. A Scientist went to work on the problem immediately by breaking the plastic switch on a duplicate module and then studying the possibility of reaching a tiny metal strip inside the switch. The strip had to be flipped over to one side to activate the LM engine, but Ground Control knew the Astronauts had dispensed with practically all tools in the interest of less weight. But they still had their Space Pens, and so were advised to retract the point and use the hollow end of the pen to activate the inside switch. Aldrin then used his Space Pen to flick the switch; lifting Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin safely off the moon.

When the astronauts began to fly, like the Russians, they used pencils. But the lead sometimes broke and became a hazard by floating in the capsule's atmosphere where there was no gravity. It could float into an eye or nose, or cause a short in the thousands of exposed electrical connections in the spacecraft. Since the fire on Apollo 1, which three Astronauts died, NASA required a writing instrument that would not burn in a 100% oxygen atmosphere. In the early sixties, NASA approached Paul C. Fisher, who was President for Fisher Pen Co. and has been in the ball point pen industry since 1948, the year in which he conceived the idea for and produced his famous Bullet pen. In addition, he was familiar with the problems of the early ballpoint pens leaking and drying out. NASA approached him to develop a pen that would not have any of these problems. Fisher did not think that this could be done and told them so. Soon afterward, he had a dream which led him to start working on a pressurized pen with a sealed cartridge. After several years and many experiments, he successfully developed the first pressurized pen. Paul C. Fisher estimates that he spent over one million dollars of his own money. By July 1965, when NASA approached him again, he was ready.

Fisher sent the first samples to Dr. Robert Gilruth, Director of the Houston Space Center at the time. The sample Space Pens were thoroughly tested by NASA, and passed all tests. In December 1967 he sold the first Fisher Space Pens to NASA for $2.95 each. NASA began using the Fisher AG-7 'Anti-Gravity' Space Pen on the October 1968 Apollo 7 mission. Soon after, the Russians adopted the Space Pen; they did not continue using pencils.
